PYLON 1995

West Virginia University School Of Medicine

The noted American Sculptor Milton Horn was Commissioned in 1954 to create a visual history of the healing arts for the proposed West Virginia University Medical Center. He Produced Eight panels depicting important developments and personages in the history of Medicine, Denistry, Nursing and Pharmacy. Medical Center architect Cyrus E. Silling had chosen Horn to do the sculptures. The artist took a year for research, collaborating with his wife Estelle, before selecting 16 milestones in the health sciences and beginning work. The reliefs, installed in October, 1956, have become the emblem of the West Virginia University Medical Center. "These works transcend mere illustration," Horn said. "Rather, they portray the spirit. At times, one panel symbolizes events that occurred a century or more apart, yet there is unity in each panel and in all of them together."

Dedication

John W. Traubert graduated with his Doctor of Medicine degree from Ohio State University in 1965. He went on to do a General Practice Residency at Mt. Carmel Hospital in Columbus, OH. After eight years of practicing in Wheeling, West Virginia, he became affiliated with West Virginia University Hospital in 1974. He served as the Chairman and residency Director of the Department of Family Medicine from 1974-1986 and was Chief of Staff from 1980-1982. We have come to know him best as the Associate Dean of Student and Curricular Affairs, a position he has held here at WVU since 1986. In addition to his numerous community contributions and family responsibilities, he has served the medical students with the same kind, gentle hand of experience that has earned him state-wide respect as a physician and human being. It is with gratitude that the staff of The Pylon dedicates this 1995 edition to John W. Traubert M.D.

Life In Morgantown

The Morgantown Division as we appeared in the Spring of 1993. Below: Cheryle Cutlip between classes and the Baers during a class gathering at the Erickson Alumni Center.

What am I doing here? We've all said it at some point during our tenure in medical school. Go on, admit it. Or maybe the quandary surfaced more ruefully as in, "Is this really what I want to be doing with my life?" Of course, we can ignore this voice by employing our favorite ego defense mechanisms or we may simply cherish the life of Sisyphus, but ultimately we all ask this question. It's one of the most basic questions of life, and its query resounds ever so loud in the ears of the medical student. Not to imply that medical school is a living hell. There just happen to be occasional dreary-eyed nights when we recall the life we've known in the past and call up visions of our life of the future. We wonder late at night why we've chosen to wedge medical training in the middle of such a beautiful scheme.

The answer is complex and has many faces, but its essence is constant and palpable: we have each discovered the one vocation that is best able to embody our aspirations, our hopes and dreams, and our ideals. Medicine is a science replete with emotion, with feeling. It is an art through whose expression we find compassion and human comfort. Through medicine we acquire an intellectual outlet, an outlet for our creativity and altruism, a challenge for our industriousness, a chance for incredible human interaction, and a chance to make our very own mark on the world, if only on those people whose lives we touch. We're given the privilege to enrich our patient's lives and to ease their death. And it is a privilege.

But this rose of privilege is not without its thorn of imbalance. It must be handled carefully or we may forget that we also have a life and dreams that are essentially unrelated to medicine, such as family, religion, the outdoors, or the arts. For most of us this dilemma exists because of our zest for and fascination with medicine, and because of our devotion to our patients and colleagues. It is not the life of sleep deprivation nor the vast amount of information that needs to be acquired and applied, nor remaining in a field that seems less and less appreciated by the public that is most challenging. The great challenge is staying true to ourselves and to our dreams and to our families, and maintaining our own well-being.

In the ancient languages "doctor of medicine" meant "teacher of the balance." We may champion our own cause and serve as true role models by striving for this balance in our own lives, even as medical students. In a field of high-power technology and unusual stress, we should try to remember the historical roots of medicine in its human and humane qualities. Our patients and colleagues are people who smile when they are happy. When we admit that the mysteries of life and death sometimes overpower the science of medicine, we realize that a smile can be the best and greatest thing we have to offer. Let us each remember from time to time and the old axiom: We cure rarely, we alleviate often, and we comfort always.

Scenes from around campus

At this point in time, we are about to embark on our individual careers. There are concerns both professional and private that we will soon be facing. Dean D'Alessandri offers the following words of advice to the Class of 1995:

There are four areas where each of you should make a personal commitment. The first is to continued education. You are responsible for keeping your knowledge current and your skills intact. The time to begin this is now.

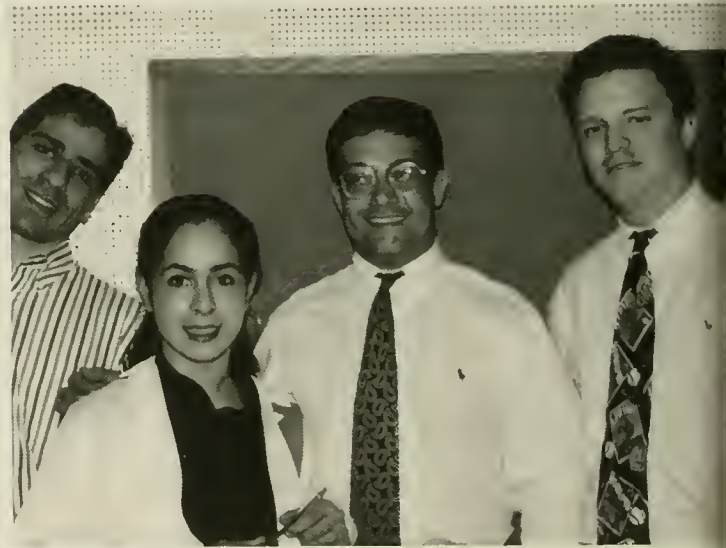

The second is to social change. We, as physicians, must be committed to improving the health of not only our patients but of all humankind. Be active in your communities. Provide your skills and abilities to those less fortunate and be their advocate.

The third is to your personal health. As a physician you will often see how fragile the human body can be. Remember your own mortality and remember, too, that you must be a role model of good health to your patients.

The last is to your family. Your entire life is going to be a series of competing priorities. Patients, research, education, hobbies, friends, parents, spouses, and children will all be in line for your attention . . . and all are important. The easiest one to sacrifice will be your family, based on the premise that "they will understand."

Life is short. Professional satisfaction is key to your happiness. But nature and science demand balance. You will get much more out of your professional achievements if there are others by your side to enjoy it.

I guess one of the important reasons that I am in academic medicine is that I so loved being a resident. All that hard work of medical school seemed to positively coalesce. I truly envy your upcoming adventure and opportunity. It is an exciting time. It is a frightening time. I was very fearful of doing damage to someone.

You are probably worried about the large volume of work and long hours. Fortunately the situation is more humane than it once was. There are inhumane residencies. However, such programs are less common and may not provide the best training. It is certainly possible to find a survivable residency. Regardless there are times that you will be tired and irritable. Great care must be taken not to let these emotions be reflected in the care of your patients. You may not like your patients, you may not understand your patients, you may even be disgusted by some of your patients but you must still care for the patients to the best of your ability and in their best interest.

You will see fabulous and horrible problems befalling innocent people. Remember that the patient is the one with the disease. Do not give the patient any more problems but do not let the human disasters become your personal disaster.

Your residency will likely be the greatest learning experience of your professional career. The habits of learning you acquire during your residency will shape the quality of your practice. More than ever before, regular reading and study is vital to your development. You may have thought that the period of rigorous study is over. It is not, but now it is fun, practical and absolutely essential. The good resident looks forward to the chance to read about their patients and will feel that there is not enough time to learn. The graduates of the West Virginia University School of Medicine are very well received at other institutions because of superb training. It is very gratifying for me to receive feedback from former students who, from a now distant perspective, have become very pleased at how well they stack-up against graduates of other schools.

It is my observation that the very best physicians view their career as an endless journey of education and improvement. They are never done - not when they finish basic sciences, medical school, residency, board certification, etc. On this wonderful trip, the residency training has thus far been the most exotic adventure.

Class of 1995 Charleston Division—At Ease!!!

Are Elie and Gina interviewing Mark and Kelly for the cutest couple or is it the most hyperactive?

Words From Todd Myers

Deciding to spend the clinical years of Med School in Charleston has had some distinct advantages. The most obvious distinction comes from the close relationships represented as tight-knit social groups. Other have developed into life-long friendships - - maybe even a couple marriages.

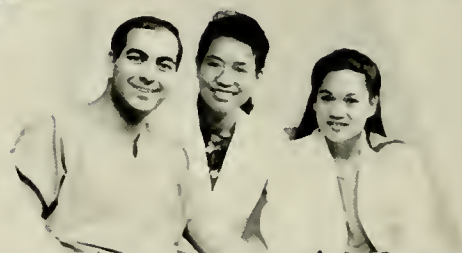

I guess I wouldn't have a problem relying on most of classmates if I were to have a medical problem. If Tasos put me to sleep, could he wake me up? Would Terry cut out only what he should? How long would I be on the table before he got there? Will Jesse (our orthopedic surgeon) let Kai delivery his 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 5th kids? Will Joe, Barbara, Chaundra, Alethia and Mouna be able to handle the immunizations? The true test would be if we could trust Pat with - - Well, you know; I'm sure he could handle it. He'll be a fine urologist. It's surprising how big of a response a somewhat similar specialty has gotten. Lora, Heather, Paul, Kai and I are looking forward to careers in Ob/Gyn. Maybe Kelly can counsel Jason, Terry, Trevor, Elie, Mark and Mateo as they deal with the stress of a general surgery residency. The future internists, Gina, Michael, Dave and Cindy, can take care of our moans and groans while Dina looks at our bones. Paveena should get special recognition for being our sole family medicine specialist. Didn't the administration mention something about going into that field?

I am continually impressed with my classmates. Their dedication to work and sense of caring for others have made me proud to be of this group.

Good luck,

A marginal perforation of the annulus is more grave than a central defect. The chief symptom is painless serous discharge. Hearing is always impaired. The amount of discharge may wax and wane, but recurrence is invariably. Painless discharge accompanying an upper respiratory infection suggests previously existing perforation. Occurrence of pain or vertigo indicates development of a complication, such as subdural irritation, brain abscess, or labyrinthine involvement.

The third year of medical school, in the opinion of some, is the most trying of all years. It is also a year of intense clinical learning in all aspects of patient care and a time when individual interests about career decisions emerge. Good Luck with fourth year!

The Oath Of Hippocrates

I swear by Apollo the physicians, by Aesculapius, Hygieia, and Panacea, and by all I hold most sacred that according to my ability and judgement

I will keep this oath and this stipulation: That I will be loyal to the profession of medicine, and just and generous to its members. That I will lead my life and practice my art in uprightness and honor. That into whatsoever home shall I enter, it shall be for the good of the sick and the well to the utmost of my power, and that I will hold myself aloof from wrong and corruption and from tempting to vice. That I will Exercise my art solely for the care of my patients and the prevention of disease, and will give no drugs and perform no operation for a criminal purpose and far less suggest such a thing. That whatsoever I shall see or hear of the lives of men which is not fit to be spoken, I will keep inviolably secret. While I Continue to keep this oath inviolate may it be granted to me to enjoy life and the practice of the art, respected by all men in all times. But should I trespass and violate this oath, may the reverse be my lot.

To The Class of 1995

WVU School of Medicine

Congratulations on reaching this important goal in your educational and professional development.

As you prepare to enter practice, remember the West Virginia State Medical Association is behind you and ready to provide all possible assistance to help you fulfill your dreams.

Now, more than ever, it is important to have a "medical voice" to influence legislation and public opinion on health care issues. The WVSMA gives you the opportunity to get involved.

For just $10, you can become a member in WVSMA/Medical Student Section and the WVSMA will automatically pay your AMA dues for 1995.

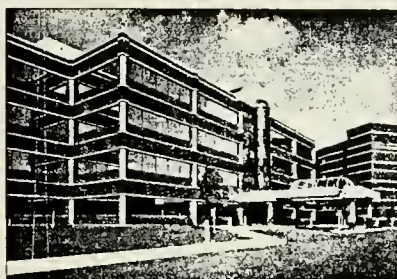

Membership in these organizations provides an active outlet for you to work with other health care providers to help determine how medicine will be practiced in the future. Join today. For more information, contact Donna Webb at 925-0342.

"Being involved in the process and being organized can mean the difference between being in control and being controlled."

To Nalini, our only daughter:

Success

To laugh often and much; to win the respect of intelligent people and affection of children; to earn the appreciation of honest critics and endure the betrayal of false friends; to appreciate beauty, to find the best in others; to leave the world a bit better, whether by a healthy child, a garden patch or a redeemed social condition; to know even one life has breathed easier because you have lived. This is to have Succeeded.
